

Litigation and Enforcement in Switzerland: Overview

by Urs Feller, Marcel Frey, and Bernhard C Lauterburg, Prager Dreifuss AG

Country Q&A | Law stated as at 01-Dec-2024 | Switzerland

A Q&A guide to dispute resolution law in Switzerland.

The country-specific Q&A gives a structured overview of the key practical issues concerning dispute resolution in this jurisdiction, including court procedures; fees and funding; interim remedies (including attachment orders); disclosure; expert evidence; appeals; class actions; enforcement; cross-border issues; and the use of ADR.

Main Dispute Resolution Methods

1. What are the main dispute resolution methods used to resolve commercial disputes?

In Switzerland, large commercial disputes are usually brought before the ordinary courts or settled through arbitration, particularly in international contexts.

Mediation is sought occasionally, however still to a lesser extent (see Question 28). The cantons of Zurich, Berne, St. Gallen, and Aargau have long-established, specialised, efficient, and highly regarded commercial courts (Handelsgericht) that achieve high settlement rates (see Question 3).

Ordinary proceedings before the Swiss courts are adversarial in nature. The court manages the timeline and the evidence procedure. It forms its opinion based on its free assessment of the evidence. As a rule, a claimant will succeed with its claim if it can fully convince the court of all factual requirements of its entitlement. The parties bear the burden of proof for the facts on which they intend to rely on in their claims, defences, or counterclaims.

The statutory base in the Civil Procedure Code (CPC) for cantons to enable international litigants to access specialised commercial courts in Switzerland will come into force on 1 January 2025. This will be available if the following conditions are met:

- The dispute must concern the business activities of at least one party.
- The amount in dispute must be at least CHF100,000.
- The parties must consent to the jurisdiction of the commercial court.
- At least one party must have its domicile, habitual residence, or registered office abroad at the time of consent.

In the Canton of Zurich, the local parliament has passed legislation to establish an international branch at the Cantonal Commercial Court that can hear international cases and conduct proceedings in English. Litigants seeking a stable and respected jurisdiction in a neutral venue for their dispute might find this new institution a welcome alternative to arbitration.

Court Litigation

Limitation Periods

2. What limitation periods apply to bringing a claim and what triggers a limitation period?

Most limitation periods are set out in the Code of Obligations (CO).

The CO provides for the following limitation periods:

- A general statutory limitation period of ten years for all claims (unless federal law prescribes a different limitation period).
- Five years for claims which by their nature require quick settlement, such as claims:
 - for rent, interest, or other periodic payments;
 - by tradesmen, craftsmen, and for medical treatment;
 - relating to the sale of foodstuffs and payments for board and lodging;
 - relating to the work of tradesmen and craftsmen, legal counsel, and notaries; and
 - of employees.
- Three years for tort claims, calculated from the day on which the injured party has knowledge of the damage and the injuring party. A tort claim is unenforceable after ten years from the date of the injury. Where a criminal action is brought for wrongful death and bodily injury, a tort claim must be made within 20 years after the injury. Where a tort claim is brought in relation to an offence subject to a longer limitation period under criminal law, the longer period is also applicable to the tort claim.
- Three years for claims based on unjust enrichment, from the date on which the injured party becomes aware of its claim, but in any event ten years after the claim first arose.

Court Structure

3. In which court are commercial disputes usually brought? Are certain types of disputes allocated to particular divisions of this court?

The CPC requires the cantons to provide a double instance system within their judiciary. In most cases, the parties must go through a first round of proceedings before a conciliation authority. Failure to reach an agreement before the conciliation authority entitles the claimant to proceed with their claim in court.

All cantons must establish a higher court for first (full) appellate review of first instance cantonal judgments. First and second instance courts are usually comprised of a three-member bench. There are no trials by jury. Commercial disputes are usually brought before the commercial court, if there is such a special court in the canton in which the defendant is resident. Labour matters and rental disputes are dealt with by specialised first instance courts in cantons that have set up specialised branches.

The highest court in Switzerland is the Federal Supreme Court (Supreme Court), which can review final judgments of the cantonal high courts as to their compliance with federal law.

Exceptions to the principle of double instance at cantonal level apply in the following circumstances.

Commercial Court

Under the CPC, the cantons are free to set up a commercial court with sole jurisdiction for commercial disputes in their territory. Decisions of commercial courts are only appealable to the Supreme Court. A dispute is deemed commercial if all the following conditions are satisfied:

- The dispute concerns the commercial activity of at least one of the parties.
- The decision is appealable to the Supreme Court owing to the amount in dispute, that is at least CHF30,000. From 1 January 2025, the amount in dispute will need to exceed CHF30,000 or be a non-pecuniary dispute.
- The parties are registered in the Swiss commercial register or a similar foreign registry. Where only the defendant is registered in the commercial register, a claimant can choose to lodge its suit either before the commercial court (where the canton has established one) or with the competent ordinary first instance court. From 1 January 2025, the parties will need to be registered as legal entities, not as natural persons in an executive capacity.
- The dispute does not relate to:
 - an employment relationship;
 - the Employment Agency Act;
 - the Equal Treatment Act;
 - rent and lease of residential and commercial premises; or
 - agricultural leases.

Sole Cantonal Instance

Under federal law, the cantons must designate within their court system a court of exclusive first instance jurisdiction for disputes relating to certain specialised areas of law, such as:

- Certain intellectual property rights (IPRs).
- Competition law and unfair competition.
- Disputes regarding the use of company names.
- Claims against the federal government.
- Claims relating to collective investment schemes.

Patent Claims

The federal legislator has established the Federal Patent Court to serve as a court of exclusive first instance jurisdiction for the whole of Switzerland in relation to patent infringement and patent validity matters.

The answers to the following questions relate to procedures that apply in the ordinary civil courts.

Rights of Audience

4. Which types of lawyers have rights of audience to conduct cases in courts where commercial disputes are usually brought? What requirements must they meet? Can foreign lawyers conduct cases in these courts?

Rights of Audience/Requirements

In principle, Swiss courts do not require a party to be represented by an attorney. However, owing to the complexity of procedural rules, most parties in commercial disputes seek professional counsel to assist them.

Attorneys registered with one of the cantonal attorney registers can appear before any Swiss court. To register, attorneys must be admitted to the bar in one of the Swiss cantons.

Foreign Lawyers

Attorneys from an EU member state or the European Free Trade Association (EFTA), who have registered with an EU or EFTA attorney register, can appear before Swiss courts either:

- Temporarily, based on the freedom to provide services. An EU or EFTA attorney is free to provide services without registration for 90 days per year or less in Switzerland. Professional activities lasting longer than 90 days require the EU or EFTA attorney to co-operate with a registered Swiss attorney.
- Permanently, if they register with the attorney register at the place where they practise. An EU or EFTA attorney can then practise freely, provided they appear before the Swiss court under their original EU or EFTA title.

An EU or EFTA attorney can also register in one of the cantonal attorney registers and adopt the local title if they have practised in Switzerland for three years under their original title or have passed a qualification exam.

Fees and Funding

5. What legal fee structures can be used? Are fees fixed by law?

Attorneys' fees can be freely arranged between lawyers and their clients. Hourly rates depending on the attorney's experience level are the norm. Contingency fees are not permitted. However, conditional fee arrangements providing for a bonus in the case of successful litigation are permitted if the base fee for the attorney provides a reasonable income. A conditional fee agreement must be made at the very beginning of the matter or after the matter is concluded. Party costs and court fees are calculated according to cantonal statutory rules and depend on the value in dispute.

When the amendments of the CPC come into effect on 1 January 2025, the court and the conciliation authority will be able to require an advance payment from the claimant of up to half of the estimated court fees or up to the full estimated court fees in certain cases (including commercial court, arbitration, summary, and appeal proceedings).

6. How is litigation usually funded? Can third parties fund it? Is insurance available for litigation costs?

Funding

Parties usually finance litigation privately. If successful, a party may recover costs from its opponent. Cost calculations are based on cantonal statutory tariffs, which are generally tied to the amount in dispute and therefore may not fully cover actual expenses (see Question 21).

A party can apply to the court to waive its court fees and to have a state-funded attorney if it does not have sufficient funds to cover proceedings in addition to its basic needs, provided the court does not view the matter as futile. A new application must be submitted for appeals proceedings. As a rule, legal entities cannot benefit from free proceedings.

There are a few third-party funding providers in Switzerland and their services are becoming increasingly popular. Their services usually involve handing over a share of the claimed amount in successful proceedings. These services are permitted provided the attorney remains independent and free from influence in the execution of their mandate. The attorney is not allowed to participate in the funding. The Supreme Court has found that informing a client about the options of third-party funding can form part of the diligent performance of their mandate.

Insurance

Legal insurance is increasingly popular. Several large, and some specialised, insurance companies offer insurance for litigation costs. This includes attorneys' fees, expert fees, court fees, advance penalty bonds, and compensation payable to the other party. Insurance also covers the other party's legal fees and court costs if the insured is unsuccessful in the suit.

Court Proceedings

Confidentiality

7. Are court proceedings confidential or public? If public, are the proceedings or any information kept confidential in certain circumstances?

The CPC requires civil law court proceedings and the delivery of judgments to be public. Copies of judgments of the second instance courts and the Supreme Court can be requested by anyone and are frequently published online (in anonymised form). Court orders as well as briefs and documents filed by the parties and the court's deliberations are confidential. The court is authorised to partially or entirely exclude the public from certain proceedings if this is in the public interest or, on application by a party, to protect interests of a concerned person (for example, trade secrets). However, public interest in commercial cases is usually limited. Family matters are always private with no public access. Pre-trial conciliation hearings and judicial settlement hearings are not open to the public.

Pre-Action Conduct

8. Does the court impose any rules on the parties in relation to pre-action conduct? If so, are there penalties for failing to comply?

There are no specific pre-action conduct rules, except that the parties must personally attend the conciliation hearing before the conciliation authority if both:

- A conciliation hearing is required by statute.
- Their place of residency or incorporation is in the same canton as the place where the conciliation hearing takes place.

Failure of the defendant to attend the conciliation hearing has no direct consequences but merely entitles the claimant to request the authorisation to proceed and to bring its claim before the court. If the claimant is in default, the application for conciliation is deemed to have been withdrawn and the proceedings are dismissed as groundless.

Main Stages

9. What are the main stages of typical court proceedings?

Starting Proceedings

Court proceedings normally start with a request for a conciliation hearing before the conciliation authority, causing lis pendens (suit pending). While request by email submission are possible using a specialised software, most requests for conciliation are still submitted in hard copy. However, the "Justitia 4.0 project" aims to achieve the digitisation of the Swiss justice system by 2026. Legal correspondence between parties to proceedings and the inspection of files will take place electronically at all stages of civil, criminal, and administrative court proceedings. For more information, see Digital Swiss Strategy: Digitisation of the Swiss justice system.

A claimant can file a lawsuit directly with the competent court without first requesting a conciliation hearing, in the following cases (among others):

- Summary proceedings.
- Claims that must be brought before a sole cantonal instance (see Question 3, Sole Cantonal Instance).
- Divorce proceedings.
- Proceedings concerning certain actions filed under the Federal Debt Enforcement and Bankruptcy Act (DEBA) (applications for provisional measures such as the seizure of property and freezing of bank accounts).
- A court has ordered a claim to be filed within a certain time period.

A claimant can also forego the conciliation proceedings if the defendant has a foreign domicile. The parties can also agree to waive conciliation where the value of the dispute exceeds m CHF100,000.

The conciliation request must include the name of the defendant, the remedy sought, and a general description of the matter in dispute. If the parties fail to reach a settlement, the conciliation authority issues the authorisation to proceed permitting the claimant to bring the dispute before the competent district court within three months. Failure to submit the statement of claim within three months has no res judicata consequence. However, a claimant will have to go through the conciliation procedure again before they can take the matter to court.

Notice to the Defendant and Defence

Once the claimant has submitted the statement of claim, the court sends a copy of the statement to the defendant by post and usually orders the claimant to advance the court fees. After payment, the court orders the defendant to file a statement of defence within 20 days. Filing periods can be extended twice on reasoned application for further periods of 20 days depending on the complexity of the matter. Occasionally, the court sets one single long (non-extendable) deadline.

If the defendant fails to submit a statement of defence in time, the court either:

- Grants a short extension to the defendant and, in the case of repeated failure to submit a statement of defence, proceeds to the main hearing.
- If the matter is ready for decision, renders its judgment.

Subsequent Stages

The subsequent stages of proceedings normally take place by exchange of filings.

A claimant has the right to reply to a statement of defence. The timing and form of reply depends on how the court intends to proceed in the matter. If the court deems it necessary, it can do one of the following:

- Order the parties to file a written reply and rejoinder respectively.
- Schedule a preparatory hearing where the parties submit their reply and rejoinder orally.
- Directly proceed to the main hearing with the parties submitting their reply and rejoinder orally.

The parties can introduce new facts and evidence with their reply and rejoinder. The court must inform the parties of every submission by another party. Based on the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR), a party is entitled to reply to any unsolicited submissions within ten days. From 2025, the parties will also be able to comment on all submissions made by the other party, also based on case law of the ECHR on a party's right to be heard. The court will need to set a deadline of at least ten days to reply, and will assume that a party has waived their right to reply on expiry of the deadline.

Litigants should be aware that pleading new facts and introducing additional evidence at the main hearing is only permitted under very limited circumstances, if a second exchange of briefs or a preparatory hearing with oral reply and rejoinder preceded the main hearing. New facts and evidence are only considered in the main hearing if they are presented without delay and either:

- Only arose after the exchange of briefs was concluded or after the last instruction hearing.
- Were already available before the exchange of briefs was concluded or before the last instruction hearing, but could not be submitted beforehand despite exercising reasonable care.

If there was no second exchange of briefs or instruction hearing, new facts and evidence can be presented at the main hearing without restriction. However, from 1 January 2025, this will in principle be done during the first party submission.

In relation to contentious facts, the court allocates the burden of proof according to substantive law and specifies which means of evidence is permitted (for example, party statements, documents, witness testimony, and expert opinions). On closing of the evidence hearing, the parties submit their closing arguments including a single rebuttal, following which the court renders its decision. At any stage of the proceedings, the court can propose the parties to hold settlement talks. The Commercial Court of the Canton of Zurich has a standing practice of holding intense settlement talks after the first exchange of briefs and manages to settle about two-thirds of all cases coming before it.

The parties can jointly waive the holding of main hearing. If a party does not appear where required, the court must consider the evidence and submissions that have been made to date ex officio. If both parties fail to appear, the court must dismiss the proceedings as devoid of object.

Interim Remedies

10. What steps can a party take for a case to be dismissed before a full trial? On what grounds can such applications be brought? What is the applicable procedure?

Conditions for Trial

A court will only hear a dispute if it has jurisdiction (both in relation to the subject matter and locality), which it examines ex officio. The court also examines at the outset whether the suit has been properly lodged (that is, following conciliation hearings) and whether the correct type of proceeding (ordinary, summary, or simplified proceeding) has been chosen. If any of these conditions are not satisfied, the claimant is normally granted a short period of time to rectify any remediable mistakes and to re-file the claim. Otherwise, the case is not admitted.

Preliminary Questions

The court can, on application and at its discretion, render a judgment on a contested preliminary question (for example, jurisdiction or the standing of a party) if this may result in substantive cost and time savings. Typically, preliminary issues turn on jurisdiction or prescription matters. These judgments must be appealed immediately.

11. Can a defendant apply for an order for the claimant to provide security for its costs? If so, on what grounds?

Unless an applicable treaty provides otherwise, the defendant can apply to the court to order the claimant to provide security for its costs if one of the following applies:

- The claimant has no domicile or registered office in Switzerland.
- The claimant appears insolvent.

- The claimant still owes court or party costs from a previous trial.
- There are other reasons indicating that the defendant's costs may be at risk.

International treaties may prohibit Swiss courts from requiring a claimant to secure costs. For example, the Lugano Convention on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters 2007 does not permit the court to order security for the defendant's costs if the claimant has no domicile or registered office in Switzerland.

12. What are the rules concerning interim injunctions granted before a full trial?

Availability and Grounds

Interim relief can be sought before proceedings begin or at any later stage during the proceedings. If interim relief is sought before lis pendens, the court sets a deadline for the petitioner to file suit (no conciliation proceedings required). The court can make the interim measure conditional on payment of security by the applicant if it is anticipated that the measures may cause loss or damage to the opposing party.

Swiss law distinguishes between interim relief measures aimed at securing monetary claims and measures dealing with non-monetary matters.

Claims for money can be secured by applying for an attachment order under the DEBA (see Question 13, Availability and Grounds). All other interim measures are governed by the CPC. For the latter, the applicant must credibly show, but not prove, both that:

- There is a realistic and imminent threat of, or actual injury causing irreparable harm unless the injunction is granted.
- The underlying cause of action is likely to prevail on the merits.

The court can order the applicant to post security.

Interim relief can take the form of mandatory or prohibitory interim injunctions, such as:

- An order to remedy an unlawful situation.
- An order to a register authority or to a third party.
- An order for performance in kind.
- An order for payment of a sum of money, in cases provided by law.

Standard of Proof

A court can order injunctive relief measures provided the applicant shows credibly that both:

- A right to which the applicant is entitled has been violated or a violation is anticipated.
- The violation threatens to cause not easily reparable harm to the applicant.

Prior Notice/Same-Day

Normally, a request for interim relief is followed by a hearing at which the court renders its decision. In urgent cases, interim relief may be ordered by the court in ex parte proceedings, usually within 24 hours. If such order is granted, it is followed by an oral hearing at a short notice.

Prohibitory and Mandatory Injunctions

Both mandatory and prohibitory interim injunctions are available (see above, Availability and Grounds).

Right to Vary or Discharge Order and Appeals

Interim orders by a first instance court are subject to appeal to the cantonal high court. The defendant can request the discharge or modification of the order. A high court decision can be further appealed to the Supreme Court if either:

- The appellant was otherwise to suffer harm that would be difficult to rectify if the appeal was not granted.
- The decision of the Supreme Court can immediately lead to a final decision, thereby avoiding long and costly evidence proceedings.

13. What are the rules relating to interim attachment orders to preserve assets pending judgment or a final order (or equivalent)?

Availability and Grounds

To secure monetary claims before a trial or in debt enforcement proceedings, creditors can apply for the attachment of a debtor's assets for the whole territory of Switzerland. Creditors must show to the court cumulatively:

- That they have outstanding debts against the debtor.
- The existence of a statutory ground for attachment.
- The existence of assets and their location.

There are six grounds on which attachment of assets can be sought:

- The debtor has no permanent residence in Switzerland.
- The debtor is attempting to conceal assets or is planning to leave Switzerland to evade the fulfilment of its obligations.
- The debtor is travelling through Switzerland or conducts business on trade fairs, if the claim must be settled immediately.
- The debtor does not reside in Switzerland and no other ground for attachment is available but the claim has sufficient connection with Switzerland or is based on recognition of debt.
- The creditor holds a provisional or definitive certificate of shortfall against the debtor.
- The creditor holds a definitive enforceable title permitting them to have any objection by the debtor set aside (definitiver Rechtsöffnungstitel). An enforceable domestic or recognisable foreign judgment or arbitral award entitles a party to request attachment of assets against its debtor.

Unless the creditor has already commenced debt enforcement proceedings (Betreibung) or filed an action to obtain an enforceable title, they must do so within ten days of service of the copy of the attachment order. If the debtor objects to the summons to pay, the creditor must, within ten days of service of the objection, request the court to have the objection set aside or pursue their claim in ordinary court proceedings.

Standard of Proof

The applying debtor must prove the grounds and prerequisites to a plausible degree.

Prior Notice/Same-Day

Attachment orders are granted by the court without notice to the other party. The other party must file an objection within ten days of learning of the attachment.

Main Proceedings

After attachment has been granted, the creditor must pursue their claim. When doing so through enforcement proceedings (Rechtsöffnungsverfahren), the applicant must demonstrate that its title, based on which it is seeking enforcement of its claim, is valid. The debtor's challenges are limited to arguments that the claim has in the meantime been discharged, deferred, or has lapsed.

Where attachment is sought based on a decision rendered by a competent court of a Lugano Convention signatory state, the Swiss court seized with the request for attachment, in the same proceedings, also renders a decision on the enforceability of the foreign judgment without hearing the other party. The other party can then file an objection against:

- The declaration of enforceability within 30 days (if resident in Switzerland) or 60 days (if resident in another Lugano Convention signatory state).
- The attachment within ten days of learning of it.

Attachments based on foreign decisions can also be reviewed as to their enforceability during the enforcement proceedings (Rechtsöffnungsverfahren).

Preferential Right or Lien

An applicant who has secured the attachment of assets does not enjoy preferential rights or lien over the attached property. An applicant must follow the ordinary debt enforcement process like any other creditor. However, if another creditor demands seizure of the assets before the applicant is in a position to do so, the applicant automatically and provisionally takes part in the seizure of property.

Damages as a Result

An applicant is liable for damages incurred by the debtor as a result of an unjust attachment order.

Security

The court can request the applicant to provide security.

14. Are any other interim remedies commonly available and obtained?

In principle, only interim remedies described in Question 12 and Question 13 are available. In certain areas of law (for example, family law, trust and estates, and personal rights proceedings), further remedies are available.

Final Remedies

15. What remedies are available at the full trial stage? Are damages only compensatory or can they also be punitive?

The final court decision can order the defendant to either:

- Pay damages.
- Perform specific actions or desist from certain actions.

A declaratory judgment is also possible, but will only be considered if specific performance cannot be requested.

The amount of damages awarded to a claimant must compensate their loss (including interest). Damages cannot be punitive in nature. However, the court can, under certain circumstances, award reparations that do not correspond to the actual damage suffered. These remedies are limited to disputes involving bodily harm/death and emotional distress.

The standard of proof for damages does not differ from the standard of proof applied in other areas of law. A claimant must demonstrate to the full conviction of the court the damages suffered in actual monetary terms. The court must be convinced, based on objective reasons, that the damages occurred in the claimed amount, and any doubts in this regard must be insignificant. In limited cases, where the damages cannot be quantified, the claimant can request the court to estimate the value of the loss or damage at its discretion. In these cases, the court estimate damages in in light of the normal course of events and the steps taken by the injured party.

Evidence

Document Disclosure

16. What documents must the parties disclose to the other parties and/or the court? Are there any rules governing this procedure?

Parties to the trial and third parties must assist the court with the discovery of the facts of the dispute. Legal entities are subject to the same rules as individuals.

Evidence is produced either with a legal brief or on order by the court, not separately before the main proceedings have commenced. Before initiating proceedings, in separate proceedings, a court can order a precautionary taking of evidence if the applicant shows prima facie evidence of an interest worthy of protection or has a statutory right to evidence. However, the applicant must pay for the court fees involved with the taking of evidence. There is no US style pre-trial discovery in Switzerland.

Under the CPC, during trial, a party can request the court to order the other party or a third party to disclose certain specifically identified documents (written documents, drawings, plans, photographs) or electronic data in its possession. There is no distinction between documents held electronically or otherwise.

The court will grant such a request if it decides that the evidence is necessary to establish legally relevant facts of the case and will prescribe a deadline to produce the requested evidence. General requests for document production are not permitted (no "fishing expeditions"). The burden of proof as to the concerned document's authenticity lies with the party wishing to draw a legal conclusion from the facts alleged in the document. Certain limitations apply to introducing new evidence after a certain point in the proceedings (usually after both parties have had two opportunities to present their case, see Question 9).

Trial parties, third parties, and witnesses do not need to testify and are entitled to withhold documents if they can invoke a statutory privilege (for example, attorney-client confidentiality (see Question 17, Privileged Documents)) or have a particularly close personal relationship to a party (for example, being directly related or married). A party refusing to disclose documents without justification cannot be sanctioned but may bear the consequences of adverse consideration of the evidence. Failure by a third party to co-operate with the court may be punishable by a fine.

Documents are normally submitted in hard copy and are sometimes supplemented by a set of electronic documents.

While the CPC does not prescribe the retention of documents during litigation, provisions in the CO require commercial entities to keep their records for ten years. Not divulging documents that the court has identified as procedurally relevant may lead the court to draw adverse inferences.

Attorney-Client Privilege and Confidentiality

17. Are any documents or communications privileged? If privilege is not recognised, are there any other rules allowing a party not to disclose a document?

Privileged Documents

All correspondence relating to, and prepared in the course of, a specific mandate to or from external professional counsel (including patent attorneys) is protected by privilege, irrespective of its location. This also applies to proceedings before the competition authorities and the Swiss Financial Supervisory Authority.

Lawyer-client privilege currently only extends to lawyers registered in the cantonal lawyers register. There is no privilege for in-house counsel. With the entry into force of the revised CPC on 1 January 2025, in-house legal counsel will enjoy certain limited protections. A party will be able to refuse to hand over documents relating to the activities of its in-house legal service if, cumulatively:

- That party is registered as a legal entity in the Swiss commercial register or in a comparable foreign register.
- The legal service of that party is managed by a person who:
 - holds a cantonal licence to practise law; or
 - meets the professional requirements for practising law in their country of origin.
- The activity in question is considered as a legal professional activity.

A third party will be able to refuse to co-operate and to hand over documents in connection with their work in an in-house legal service under the same conditions. It remains to be seen how effective this protection will be.

The "without prejudice" principle is not covered by statutory privilege but is generally recognised by the courts when communication made in the context of genuine settlement negotiations is at issue (see below, Other Non-Disclosure Situations) and bar rules include the principle.

Other Non-Disclosure Situations

A party may be entitled to withhold documents if it has a particularly close relationship to the party to the proceedings (see Question 16).

During settlement discussions, parties frequently circulate proposals that they do not want to be used in subsequent court proceedings (without prejudice). Parties can maintain and need to indicate clearly that these documents are without prejudice to their position in later court proceedings if settlement negotiations fail. Courts respect the parties' agreement provided their intention is clearly expressed in earlier correspondence.

Witnesses and Experts

18. What are the rules in relation to witnesses and third party experts?

Witnesses

Witnesses give oral evidence and may be subject to criminal penalties for giving false testimony. A witness who fails to appear may be summoned or sanctioned with a fine. Witness statements are not common in Switzerland. However, in exceptional cases the court may admit a signed witness statement as a physical record. The court can obtain information in writing from a private person if it does not consider it necessary to examine this person as a witness.

As with every means of permissible evidence, the court must form its opinion based on its free assessment of the evidence taken. Accordingly, the law does not prescribe any rules on the probative value of evidence (except that public registers and official records are conclusive evidence of the facts stated in them, unless their content is proven to be incorrect). While documentary evidence is generally regarded as more reliable than witness testimony, the probatory value of a testimony can be very high depending on how that testimony is given.

There is no specific right to cross-examine witnesses. However, following the initial interrogation by the judge, each party can put additional questions to the witness either:

- Through the judge.
- Directly to the witness, with authorisation by the judge.

These additional questions must not go beyond the issues on which the court heard testimony, and therefore solely serve to clarify the issues on which the court heard testimony. Questions that go beyond these issues, or repeat questions already asked by the judge, are not permitted.

The CPC also allows a court to put witnesses against each other and against the parties.

Experts

Appointment procedure. Where the court considers that expert knowledge or a technical assessment of factual evidence is required, it can appoint one or several experts, on request of a party or of its own accord. The parties can express their opinion on the court's choice of an expert and make their own suggestions before the appointment, if requested to do so by the court. Any evidence, including where a party wants to rely on an expert witness, must be disclosed at the evidence stage at the latest.

Role of experts. Court-appointed experts act on behalf of the court and are subject to the same rules on conflicts of interest as judges. Specialist opinions given by experts at the request of the parties are considered by the court as party explanations and have no added evidential value. This will change as of 1 January 2025, when reports of party-appointed experts will no longer be treated as mere party statements but as documents, and therefore constitute evidence. They will be subject to the principle of free assessment of evidence. Their probative value will be determined on a case-by-case basis, considering all circumstances (for example, relationship between the parties and the expert, appointment of the expert, process and procedure for obtaining the expert opinion, and relevant expertise of the expert in question).

Cross-examination of experts. The parties can comment on the questions posed to the expert and request other or further questions to be posed to the expert. The parties are entitled to comment on the expert's conclusions and can under certain circumstances request the appointment of a new expert.

Fees. Court-appointed expert fees must be advanced by the party requesting the expert opinion. If both parties request an expert opinion, the advance may be split equally among the parties. The court takes into consideration the burden of proof when deciding which party must advance the costs. Expert fees are added to the court fees at the end of proceedings and are borne by the unsuccessful party (see Question 21). Alternatively, they can be split proportionally among the parties, reflecting the parties' varying degrees of success.

Appeals

19. What are the rules concerning appeals of first instance judgments in commercial disputes?

Appellate Courts

Judgments rendered by a district court can be appealed to the higher cantonal court. A further appeal to the Supreme Court is only possible if either:

- The amount in dispute is at least CHF30,000.
- A legal issue of major importance is at stake.

Judgments rendered by a commercial court (for the cantons that have established commercial court, see Question 1) can only be appealed to the Supreme Court.

There are no further conditions for bringing an appeal. In particular, the appellant does not need permission to bring an appeal.

Grounds for Appeal

The higher cantonal court has full competence to review questions of law and of fact. The Supreme Court's review is generally limited to questions of federal law (see also Question 3).

Time Limit

Judgments of district courts must be appealed within 30 days. Judgments of the higher cantonal courts and those of the commercial courts must also be brought before the Supreme Court within 30 days. In summary proceedings, the time limit for bringing an appeal is ten days.

Class Actions

20. Are there any mechanisms available for collective redress or class actions?

Typical class actions are not available under Swiss law. Claims must be brought by individual claimants. There is an exception for associations and other organisations of national or regional importance that are authorised by their articles of association to protect the interests of a certain group of individuals (for example, certain organisations whose mandate is to protect nature and heritage, or consumer interests). These can bring a group action (Verbandsklage) in their own name for violation of the personal rights of the members of the group.

Where an injury to these interests is alleged, the association can request that either:

- The damage be prevented or removed.
- The court acknowledges that the harm has occurred.

However, group actions are not widely used and in 2020 the Supreme Court dismissed a group action launched by a consumer association for lack of standing. A proposal to revise and improve group actions has been withdrawn and postponed following critical feedback in a public consultation. The proposal was reintroduced in December 2021. Following various meetings, the legal committee of the National Council rejected the proposal in October 2024. In an overall assessment, the committee took the view that the proposal harbours the risk of an "Americanisation" of the legal system and that commercially-oriented law firms and litigation funding organisations could specialise in filing lawsuits that cause considerable damage to the Swiss economy.

Several claimants can file a suit against a single defendant. Depending on whether the claimants are required by law to proceed together or not, the CPC contains differing provisions in relation to the effect of each claimant's submissions on other claimants.

In addition, several claimants basing their claims on the same set of material facts can bring their suits before the court individually and request a stay in all but one of the proceedings until a lead judgment is rendered by the court.

Costs

21. Does the unsuccessful party have to pay the successful party's costs and how does the court usually calculate any costs award? What factors does the court consider when awarding costs?

The losing party is ordered to compensate the successful party's procedural costs. If a party is successful in part, a proportionate payment is ordered. Procedural costs include:

- Court costs.
- The winning party's costs. This includes the necessary outlays (for example, travel expenses and, in some cases, expert reports), the costs of necessary professional representation, and, in justified cases, reasonable compensation for personal efforts if a party is not professionally represented.

Under the CPC, the cantons are competent to set the tariffs according to which the cantonal courts calculate the court and party compensation fees. Therefore, court fees and party compensation fees may differ among the cantons. Litigants should be aware that the cantonal fee schedules:

- May not necessarily be in line with lawyers' fees.
- Give courts a wide discretion in setting their own fees and awarding compensation for costs.

Therefore, in practice, successful litigants are often only compensated partially.

The CPC only contains a few general rules on the matter. It authorises courts to request advance payment of the expected court fees of a claim before starting proceedings. Additionally, the claimant may be ordered by the court (on motion of the defendant) to post security (either in cash or in the form of a guarantee from a bank with a branch in Switzerland or from an insurance company authorised to operate in Switzerland) for the defendant's costs (see Question 11).

Accordingly, foreign claimants need to be aware that litigating in Switzerland normally requires payment of an advance of the expected court fees and posting of a security for the defendant's costs at the outset, provided there is no treaty in place between the claimant's place of residence and Switzerland (for example, the Hague Conventions on Civil Procedure and International Access to Justice, or a bilateral agreement, excluding this requirement by reason of their not being domiciled in Switzerland).

In appeal proceedings before the Supreme Court, the costs award is calculated according to a regulation issued by the court itself. The following factors, among others, are considered in deciding the final costs award:

- Claim amount.
- Complexity of the matter.
- Duration and stages of the proceedings (pleadings, hearings, evidence, and settlement negotiations).

The courts can, under certain circumstances, depart from the ordinary principles of liquidating procedural costs and award costs at their discretion. However, this only applies in individual cases where applying the general rules may prove to be rigid and unjust.

The courts rarely take pre-trial offers into account.

If the unsuccessful party is ordered to pay a certain amount, the costs order include interest on that amount that has accrued up to that date. From the date of the judgment, the successful party can also demand payment of interest at the statutory rate of 5% per year.

Enforcement of a Local Judgment

22. What are the procedures to enforce a judgment given by the courts in your jurisdiction in the local courts?

Enforcement procedures depend on whether a party has been ordered to pay damages or perform a specific act. Judgments ordering the payment of damages are enforced under the DEBA. The judgment creditor can start summary enforcement proceedings by requesting the court to set aside the opposition the defendant raised against the payment summons and to order the continuation of enforcement through the attachment of goods (for natural persons) or bankruptcy proceedings (for legal persons).

Judgments for specific performance are enforced under the CPC and must also be requested in summary proceedings with the enforcement court at the defendant's place of residence (for natural persons) or place of registered office (for legal persons). Enforcement requests can also be brought at the place where the measures are to be executed or where the original judgment was rendered.

The claimant must submit the documents showing that their claim is enforceable. The judge then orders the obliged party to effect performance under threat of penal consequences and payment of a fine if performance is refused. The judge can also authorise the requesting party to retain a third party to substitute performance. The claimant is entitled to have their claim for specific performance changed into a claim for damages if the defendant continues to resist enforcement.

Cross-Border Litigation

23. Do local courts respect the choice of governing law in a contract? If so, are there any national laws or rules that may modify or restrict the application of the law chosen by the parties in their contract? What are the rules for determining what law will apply in the absence of any agreement or to non-contractual claims?

Contractual Choice of Law

Parties are generally free to choose the law applicable to their business relations. However, certain matters are excluded from this principle, for example:

- Contracts relating to immovable property are subject to the law applicable at the property's location.
- Matters relating to consumers, employees, and IPRs are subject to laws that have a connection to certain objective criteria (for example, the place of residence of the consumer, the place of employment, or the place of registration of the IPRs).

A choice of law provision in a contract on the international sale of goods designating Swiss law may result in the application of the UN Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods 1980 or similar treaties, unless the parties have expressly excluded the application of those treaties. Swiss courts usually interpret a choice of law clause referring to Swiss law as the applicable law as a reference to the substantive law. If the parties intend to exclude any conflict of laws principles from their choice of law, they should do so specifically.

No Choice of Law and Non-Contractual Claims

Absent a choice of law, the law applicable to a contractual dispute is the law of the state with which it is most closely connected (closest connection test).

For non-contractual claims, the parties can choose any time after the event causing the damage that the law of the forum, that is Swiss law, will apply. Absent a choice of law by the parties, the Federal Act on Private International Law (PILA) determines the applicable law. If a tort violates an existing legal relationship between the tortfeasor and the injured party, the tort claim is governed by the law applicable to the existing legal relationship.

Contractual Choice of Forum

24. Do local courts respect the choice of jurisdiction in a contract? Do local courts claim jurisdiction over a dispute in some circumstances, despite the choice of jurisdiction?

Swiss courts generally respect choice of forum clauses within the scope of the relevant statutes and treaties. These clauses must be in writing and can relate to an existing or a future dispute. However, there are also certain specific mandatory rules, for example:

- Disputes concerning consumers must generally be filed with the competent court at the consumer's domicile, unless the consumer agrees to a different jurisdiction (only after the dispute arose).
- Disputes concerning employees are heard by the competent court at the employee's domicile or at the place of employment. Agreements on jurisdiction can only be entered into after the dispute arose.
- Disputes concerning the rent of immovable property must be filed with the competent court at the place of the property in question.

International treaties take precedence over the local statutory rules. The main international treaty on jurisdiction is the Lugano Convention. Under the Lugano Convention, the parties can either:

- Conclude a separate jurisdiction agreement.
- Include a jurisdiction clause in their contractual arrangements.

The local courts respect this practice, unless statutory law provides for a mandatory forum or declares it unlawful to waive the statutory forum before the dispute has arisen.

From 1 January 2025, Switzerland will be bound by the Hague Convention on Choice of Court Agreements. While the PILA and Lugano Convention contain rules on choice of forum agreements, the Hague Convention's uniform rules will improve legal certainty for legal disputes involving parties from states that are not party to the Lugano Convention, among others.

Service of Foreign Proceedings

25. If a party wishes to serve foreign proceedings on a party in your jurisdiction, what is the procedure to effect service in your jurisdiction? Is your jurisdiction a party to any international agreements affecting this process?

International Agreements

When serving foreign procedural notices to parties in Switzerland, a foreign party must comply with international treaties governing international civil procedure matters and must use the means of judicial assistance. Switzerland is party to two major multilateral treaties:

- The Convention on Civil Procedure 1954 (Hague Civil Procedure Convention).
- The Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil or Commercial Matters 1965 (Hague Service Convention).

A number of bilateral agreements authorise direct contact between judicial authorities. There are also bilateral agreements that complement the Hague Conventions. Where there is no international agreement, Switzerland automatically applies the Hague Civil Procedure Convention to foreign requests that it receives.

Serving Process

The Hague Civil Procedure Convention requires the requesting party or the locally competent authority to use the consular channels to send the documents to be served to the consular representation in Switzerland, which then approaches the Swiss Federal Office of Justice to effect service on the party resident in Switzerland.

The Hague Service Convention requires parties to request their local authorities to forward requests for service according to a model request to the competent central authority in Switzerland. Each canton has its own central authority, which serves process on persons domiciled in its territory. The central authority approaches the competent court, which then serves documents by qualified postal delivery. If the law applicable in the country of the party requesting service permits lawyers to serve documents, these persons are recognised as judicial officers and can also approach the central authority directly. As it can prove difficult for the requesting state to know which of the 26 central cantonal authorities has jurisdiction, the Federal Office of Justice is also designated to be a central authority and passes foreign requests to the competent cantonal authorities.

Switzerland declared that it is opposed to the use in its territory of direct service through diplomatic or consular agents and any other direct form of service. Accordingly, any judicial document must be served through the competent central authority.

Taking of Evidence for a Foreign Court Proceeding

26. What is the procedure to take evidence from a witness in your jurisdiction for use in proceedings in another jurisdiction? Is your jurisdiction party to an international convention on this issue?

International Agreements

To take evidence from a Swiss-domiciled witness, the rules of the multilateral treaties to which Switzerland is a party apply, including:

- The Convention on the Taking of Evidence Abroad in Civil or Commercial Matters 1970 (Hague Evidence Convention).
- The Hague Civil Procedure Convention.

A number of bilateral agreements authorise direct contact between judicial authorities. There are also bilateral agreements that complement the Hague Conventions. Where there is no international agreement, Switzerland applies the Hague Civil Procedure Convention to foreign requests that it receives.

Procedure

Under the Hague Evidence Convention, the procedure is as follows:

- The competent judicial authority of the requesting state transmits its letter of request to the Federal Office of Justice or directly to the competent cantonal authority.
- The competent cantonal authority then takes evidence at the witness's place of domicile.

Under the Hague Civil Procedure Convention, the following procedure applies:

- The competent authority of the state in which the request is made must transmit its request to its diplomatic representation in Switzerland.
- The diplomatic representative of the requesting state in Switzerland transmits the request to the Swiss Federal Office of Justice.

- The Swiss Federal Office of Justice transmits the request to the competent local judicial authority in the canton where the witness is domiciled, which then takes the evidence.

The Hague Evidence Convention replaces Articles 8 to 16 of the Hague Civil Procedure Convention (Article 29, Hague Evidence Convention). Therefore, if a signatory state has concluded both treaties, the Hague Evidence Convention takes precedence.

Notably, the surrender of evidence located in Switzerland to foreign authorities or parties in violation of the applicable international conventions to which Switzerland is a party may constitute a violation of Articles 271 (prohibited acts for a foreign state) and 273 (economic intelligence service) of the Swiss Criminal Code or other special statutory provisions (such as banking regulation and data protection regulation). Switzerland made a reservation under the Hague Evidence Convention in relation to letters of request issued for the purpose of obtaining pre-trial discovery of documents as known in common law countries. Therefore, requests that are formulated in general terms and require the opposing party to indicate the documents in their possession with the aim of obtaining information that bears no relation to the case or in an attempt to discover evidence to substantiate a claim ("fishing expeditions") are rejected.

Switzerland also made a reservation to the taking of evidence by diplomatic officers, consular agents, and commissioners. This is only possible on authorisation by the federal government (but a lawyer does not require an authorisation when collecting evidence in Switzerland during ordinary case preparation).

Enforcement of a Foreign Judgment

27. How are foreign judgments enforced in your jurisdiction?

If the judgment was rendered by a court of a Lugano Convention signatory state, an enforcement application must be filed with the competent Swiss court, along with a copy of the judgment satisfying the conditions necessary to establish its authenticity and a certificate issued by the court that rendered the judgment (Annex V, Lugano Convention). The court must decide on the application in ex parte summary proceedings and declare the judgment enforceable immediately on satisfaction of the formalities under Annex V, without reviewing whether there are grounds to deny recognition and enforcement. The party against whom the enforcement is sought is not heard until the appeal stage.

If the judgment was rendered by a court of a state not party to Lugano Convention, the enforcing party must file with the competent court:

- A complete and authenticated copy of the decision.
- A confirmation that no ordinary appeal can be lodged against the decision or that the appeal is final.
- For judgments rendered by default, an official document establishing that the defaulting party was duly summoned and that it had the opportunity to enter a defence.

The other party is entitled to a hearing and to introduce evidence. The competent court dealing with the matter can, on a party's request, order protective measures without hearing the other party. The court will deny recognition if:

- It violates Swiss public policy.
- Procedural guarantees considered to be fundamental in Switzerland were not adhered to in the foreign proceeding.

A judgment rendered in a state not party to the Lugano Convention is considered a final judgment within the meaning of the DEBA. A local court can grant exequatur on a summary review of the matter.

Alternative Dispute Resolution

28. What are the main alternative dispute resolution (ADR) methods used to settle commercial disputes? Is ADR used more in certain industries? What proportion of commercial disputes is settled through ADR?

Large commercial disputes are usually resolved through litigation or arbitration. Other ADR methods play a limited role, although mediation appears to have become more popular recently, as illustrated by an increasing number of organisations offering mediation services and training, and the adoption of the Swiss Rules on Commercial Mediation by the Swiss Chambers of Commerce and Industry in 2021.

Arbitration (but not necessarily other forms of ADR) is more common in international commercial disputes than in domestic disputes. The Swiss Arbitration Centre regularly publishes a statistical overview of the cases it administers. The top three industry sectors using arbitration between 2016 and 2020 were the manufacturing sector, the commodity mining and trading sector, and the banking and finance sector, accounting for 46% of cases.

The Swiss Rules of International Arbitration were upgraded in 2021 to reflect, among others, the ongoing digitalisation. Paperless filings have become the new standard. Organising the proceedings expressly includes that the arbitral tribunal at an early stage discusses with the parties issues of data protection and cybersecurity, to ensure an appropriate level of compliance and security. Any hearings may be held in person or remotely by videoconference or other appropriate means, as decided by the arbitral tribunal after consulting with the parties.

For more information on arbitration in Switzerland, see Country Q&A, Arbitration Procedures and Practice in Switzerland: Overview and Practice note, Arbitration in Switzerland, .

In contentious court proceedings, the court can recommend mediation to the parties at any time (see also Question 29). On the parties' joint application, the court may confirm a settlement reached through mediation during proceedings (CCP). This makes the mediation settlement equal to a court judgment. Settlements reached through mediation outside of court proceedings cannot be confirmed by the court.

29. Does ADR form part of court procedures or does it only apply if the parties agree? Can courts compel the use of ADR?

Apart from cases where conciliation proceedings are mandatory, ADR is not part of court procedures. Swiss courts cannot compel the use of ADR. However, courts are free to facilitate a settlement during court proceedings or to encourage parties to resort to mediation.

Where a conciliation hearing is mandatory, the parties can jointly elect to use mediation instead. If a settlement cannot be reached, the conciliation authority will issue a writ permitting the claimant to proceed to the competent district court (see Question 9). From 1 January 2025, the cantonal conciliation authority will be able to submit a proposed judgment to the parties in financial disputes if the value in dispute does not exceed CHF10,000 (currently CHF5,000). Voluntary conciliation proceedings will also be available in matters brought before the commercial courts.

At all times during the court proceedings, parties can jointly elect to resort to mediation, thereby staying court proceedings.

To be enforceable in court, a multi-tier dispute resolution clause providing for pre-trial arbitration or conciliation or mediation should clearly set out the conditions (including time limits) for the arbitration or mediation proceedings. Non-compliance with pre-arbitral mediation under a multi-tier dispute resolution clause may result in an annulment of the arbitral award.

30. How is evidence given in ADR? Can documents produced or admissions made during (or for the purposes of) the ADR later be protected from disclosure by privilege? Is ADR confidential?

In mediation proceedings, the mediation agreement governs the procedural rules. The parties are free to choose any rules to govern the mediation process. In the absence of provisions relating to evidence, the mediator conducts the proceedings as they consider appropriate.

Mediation must be confidential, and statements and admissions of the parties cannot be used in court. The same applies to evidence obtained during mediation. Mediators are entitled to refuse to testify on matters relating to the mediation proceedings.

In domestic arbitration, subject to the rules of the CCP and international arbitration, the parties are free to agree on the procedural rules within the mandatory procedural limits (guarantees) prescribed by law.

Since arbitration, and more generally ADR, is contractual, confidentiality depends on the parties' agreement. For example, Article 44(1) of the Swiss Rules of International Arbitration provides that in principle, arbitration is confidential, unless the parties agree otherwise or disclosure is required by a party as a matter of law, to protect or pursue a legal right, or to enforce or challenge an award in legal proceedings before a judicial authority. Article 13 of the Swiss Rules of Mediation also contains a confidentiality clause.

31. How are costs dealt with in ADR?

Costs are borne by the parties, subject to their mediation agreement or equivalent, or applicable arbitration procedural rules. For example, the Swiss Rules on International Arbitration, which can also be chosen for domestic arbitration, provide that the costs of the arbitration must in principle be borne by the unsuccessful party.

32. What are the main bodies that offer ADR services in your jurisdiction?

The following organisations, among others, offer ADR services in Switzerland:

- The Swiss Arbitration Centre, an independent institution under the umbrella of the Swiss Arbitration Association (ASA), which adopted:
 - Swiss Rules on Commercial Mediation in 2021; and
 - Swiss Rules on International Arbitration in 2004 (revised in 2021), which can also be chosen for domestic arbitration.
- The WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Center, a branch of the World Intellectual Property Organization established in 1994. This centre offers institutional mediation services for private parties.
- The Swiss Chamber of Commercial Mediation (SCCM).
- The Swiss Association of Mediators (SDM-FSM).
